TWO NIGHTS OF HORROR,

What an "Evening World" Reporter Saw and Heard in the Van Dyke House.

A SAFE REFUGE FOR THIEVES.

Details of the Detention and Robbery of James W. Clift.

The Night Clerk and the Two Women Discharged for Lack of Evidence.

The notoriety given to the Van Dyke House, corner of Bayard street and the over the case of James W. Clift, of Philadelphia, as told in "The Evening World" yesterday, has caused a watchful eye to be placed upon it by

The fact that Clift was detained there, either with or against his will, for nearly three weeks and fed on nothing but whiskey; that no physician was called in until the last moment, and that his relatives were not notified as to his condition, are matters of

So far as the police are concerned, it is immaterial that the young night clerk who was arrested yesterday by Inspecthe case, was discharged in the Tombs Police Court this morning for lack of legal incriminating evidence, and that the two women witnesses were also set fully satisfied of the fact that the desire of the young night clerk and some of the others in the place was to secure Clift's money. In order to do so they would apparently have been willing to keep him there for months, until the end finally came, as it would have done. Clift would then have been carted to Potter's Fleid. He would have been burled there, and his relatives would not have been made acquainted with the facts.

That the Van Dyke House is one of the lowest class of disreputable places on the Bowery an "Evening World" reporter, who spent two nights and three days there, can vouch for. Every disorderly woman knows it. It is a safe asylum to which they can decoy their drunken dupes, safe from interference, to rob and to plunder at their pleasure. As to the Clift case, it is the same, apparently, as hundreds of others.

The Van Dyke House, from which place he was taken in an ambulance at the instance of "The Evening World" yesterday, is known as "Old Suicide Hall." Many dead bodies have been taken from it, and it is no fault of the management that Clift's name was not added to the list of dead men.

Charles Dickens, in his best moments, never pictured a scene of London life to equal that which the reporter witnessed in the Van Dyke House last Monday night. Thieves from Philadelphia and elsewhere talked about their profession" just as calmly as a broker would talk of stocks. Stories were told of robberles, with 2nd without violence; of robberles, with 2nd without violence; of robberles in broad daylight, of ruined homes and women until the newspaper man, used to scenes of the wildest kind, stood appalled.

It was a common matter, according to the stories, for girls to be enticed into the stories, on one in the hold erecurred into the list of the fallen ones.

No one in the hold even dreamed there for months, until the end finally came, as it would have done. Clift would street, to add another name to the list of the fallen ones.

No one in the hotel even dreamed of the reporter's identity. He sat at the same table for two nights with the gang that infests the place. Night Clerk Eddy Goodwin was one of the number at these gatherings.

At the end of the bar is a little round table, made to accommodate nine or ten persons. In the daytime it serves as a "reading room," all the morning papers being placed upon it. In the night-time, however, the papers are removed and then the table makes an excellent board, upon which the habitues throw dice for drinks.

Further back is a room, not more than 6x12 feet, in which are a table and af ew chairs. That is the place where the women take their victims, preparatory to securing rooms.

Men and women came and went all night long. Every woman seemed to know night Clerk Eddy Goodwin very well. He had a nod and a smile for all of them.

Last Monday night two of the Philaleiphia crooks had talked of several

"You ought to have seen that fellow when he came here Arst." Eddy said. "He had any amount of money. He threw is bills around like water, I have threw $5 bills around like water. I have got in my pocket now an order on a man in Wall street for $250. When I ket it we will have a good time. You can bet I am not going to get lett."

One of the men present asked to be allowed in on the "deal," and the accommodating Eddy said he was willing. Froviding the other man would accompany Eddy to Wall street the next day, he was to be given a new suit of clothes. All this out of the money which Clift was supposed to have on deposit.

A fac simile of the order which Eddy referred to was published in "The Evening World" yesterday. How the reporter obtained that orde is pobably one of the chirts to the end of their days.

"Why don't you give him a knocker-out? one of the gang asked.
"Oh, what is the use?" Eddy replied. "It would be hard, anyhow, on the—We have had two dead men taken out of this place already, and he is bound to make the third. What is the use of giving him a knocker-out, when he cannot last more than a day or so, anyhow?"

These are but a few of the remarks passed about the round table in the back of the saloon last Monday night. They will at least go to establish the character of the place. The woman, "Maggie," who has charge of the chambermaids, told the reporter a story that was in itself sensational. She has since, however, tried to qualify it.

'The Evening World" Predicted Before the Convention that Hill Would Be Chosen.

When the inside history of the New York State Demogratic Convention of 1894 is published some peculiar facts will revealed in it, and the wonderful enthusiasm with which the body nominated Senator Hill for Governor will not show quite so much spontaneity as appeared upon the surface. Political critics in this city have al-ready begun the task of picking holes in the gaudy curtain of "personal popu-larity" that the leaders in the Convention dropped upon their deliberations, and some of these critics are declaring that the peep thus obtained of the Con-vention machinery has convinced them that Senator Hill's nomination was as much of a cut-and-dried affair as that of Levi P. Morton. Just here it may not be amiss to call attention to the fact that "The Evening World," on Sept. 19, last, said in its
